

Standup 10: Assumption Testing and Adjustments

This week focused on validating statistical assumptions. Shapiro–Wilk tests indicated non-normality, and Levene’s test showed unequal variances. These findings were explicitly documented.

Despite violations, the large sample size provided robustness, allowing ANOVA results to remain informative when interpreted cautiously.

Next week, I will analyze the relationship between credit inquiries and credit scores. Documentation records all methodological decisions.