

Standup 11: Credit Inquiries and Correlation Analysis

This week analyzed credit inquiries using Spearman correlation. Results showed a moderate negative relationship between inquiry frequency and credit score quality.

A key challenge was distinguishing correlation from causation, as increased inquiries may both reflect and contribute to financial stress.

Next week, I will focus on visualizing results to improve interpretability. Statistical outputs and charts are documented.