

Standup 14: Wrap-Up and Future Work

This final week focused on synthesizing insights and documenting lessons learned. The analysis demonstrated that credit scores are shaped by a combination of behavioral, demographic, and financial factors rather than income alone.

Future work could include fairness and bias audits, enhanced interpretability using SHAP, and longitudinal analysis. Key lessons include the importance of data cleaning, transparency, and visual storytelling.

Final documentation captures conclusions, limitations, and recommendations for future extension.