

Standup 4: Data Cleaning and Preprocessing

This week concentrated on data cleaning and preprocessing. Income exhibited substantial right skew due to extreme outliers, which necessitated log transformation to stabilize the distribution and improve analytical reliability.

Handling missing values and outliers required careful judgment to avoid distorting results. These decisions were documented to preserve transparency and reproducibility.

Next week, I will begin modeling income and credit score relationships using a Random Forest classifier. All preprocessing steps are being fully documented to support replication.